Joaquín and Armando are forced to live on the streets. The two friends have no family, so they had to learn to survive on their own. They know how to search for food, secure a warm place to sleep, and find allies in the big city. The setting for this unsettling yet important novel could be any Latin American city. A window into the reality of millions of children living on the streets without a family.

An old motel hangs precariously off a cliff overlooking a dark and stormy sea. Inside, two sick children, Ethan and Cathy, wait alone for their father to come back with a doctor. When a sailor arrives at the motel looking for a room, the children let him in. What follows is a session of macabre storytelling that will delight and terrify Ethan and Cathy while the storm passes.
